printingThe present invention relates to a method and apparatus for optimizing a large scale production environment and more particularly, to a method and apparatus for optimizing the operation of a global integrated production environment across multiple facilities of a global production enterprise. Typically, integrated enterprises depend on strategic and operational planning, contingency planning and periodic optimization processes that are executed at a macro level within management of each of the facilities of such enterprises. Such strategic and operational planning is generally prepared in a timely manner to provide guidance in development of detailed operational procedures for the enterprises. Additionally, numerous operations planning exercises are typically carried out, at least periodically, to optimize production of finished products or to maximize profits for such enterprises. Prior to these planning exercises, estimates of production demand for the facilities are typically determined based on past product line and location demand. These estimates, in turn, are typically used to estimate raw material requirements needed by the facilities to produce finished products or to maximize profits. During the course of a planning or optimization exercise, estimates of production demand are generally revised to reflect changes in the volume of production demand of various products or location demand. In some cases, changes in production demand are periodically communicated to the various facilities of the enterprise. Based on these revised estimates of production demand, the managers of the facilities are generally required
